LIVE the Word

Suppose your friend told you that he wanted to read the Bible, but it just seemed too confusing to him. How could you help him? What would you say?

The Bible can be a little difficult to understand in places. But if you can ask yourself some simple questions while you are reading it—who said it? what did they say? when did this happen? where were they? why was this happening?—it will become more clear. And always pray before you read the Bible, that God will help you to understand it!

God has revealed Himself to us in the words of the Bible. It is God's only written revelation to man. We are called to diligently study what has been revealed and apply it to the way we live our lives.

We trust in God who has revealed all things which are needed to live lives that honor Him. The Apostle Peter relates this idea to us in 2 Peter 1:2-4 when he tells us that "all things that pertain to life and godliness" have been given to us "through the knowledge of Him." How do we know about God? We know Him primarily by what He has revealed to us in His Word. The doctrine known as the sufficiency of Scripture doesn't mean that the Bible is an exhaustive manual on everything, but that its principles are sufficient to guide us in the different situations we face.

In order to study His word diligently, we first observe the text by asking questions and allowing the text to answer. We ask questions such as who, what, when, where, why, and how. Then we interpret what we've read by asking the question, "What does this passage mean?" And finally, we apply the Word to our lives by asking, "What does God want to change in my life?"

This simple method is referred to as inductive Bible study. Studying this way allows us to see what the Bible says rather than trying to make the Bible say what we would like it to say.

In school or at your local library, there are many opportunities to spend time reading. You may choose to read your Bible instead of other things. What if one of your friends makes fun of you or asks, "Why in the world would you want to read that boring book?" What would you say?

The Bible is not boring. It is exciting. And it is the only book I know that can change me, give me wisdom, fill my heart with joy, give me more understanding of who God is, and enable me to trust Him and His promises completely. It is a great book—let's read it together sometime!
