SOMETHING TO ROAR ABOUT: Creation Museum Already Hosts 100,000th Guest; Asks County For Permission To Expand Parking

PETERSBURG, Ky, July 23, 2007 – Less than two months after opening its doors to the public, the Creation Museum hosted its 100,000th guest this past weekend – a milestone not expected for months to come and a sign, museum officials say, of the continuing popularity of the critically acclaimed high-tech facility.

The huge crowds and the need to adequately accommodate them have prompted the museum's parent organization, Answers in Genesis, to seek permission to expand the parking lot by 600 spaces. The museum and planetarium are located in northern Kentucky, just west of the Cincinnati Airport. The museum presents a walk through history according to the Bible, from creation to the last book of the Bible, Revelation. Along the way, it uses animatronic dinosaurs, large models, and real dinosaur bones and eggs as the main teaching tools.

"We are delighted the Creation Museum has generated such interest, but I'm not surprised," said Tom Caradonio, president and chief executive officer of the Northern Kentucky Convention and Visitors Bureau. "Many religious-meeting partners told us early on they were interested in taking groups there."

A family from Buffalo, N.Y., passed the 100,000-guest threshold. Kevin Farner, along with his wife Debbie and three children, drove eight hours to reach the museum. They first learned of the ministry after hearing AiG President Ken Ham speak at a conference a few years ago.

Because of the on-going growth and crowds reaching up to 3,500 on recent Saturdays, the museum has petitioned Boone County, Kentucky, commissioners to add an additional 600 spots to its already burgeoning parking lot. A hearing on the request is set for next month.

AiG is a biblical apologetics ministry. It conducts more than 300 teaching meetings each year, hosts an award-winning Web site (www.AnswersInGenesis.org), and produces the "Answers" radio program heard on 860 U.S. stations.
